ICTMT 11, the eleventh International Conference on Technology in Mathematics Teaching, is organized by the University of Bari and the University of Torino and it will take place at the Campus of the University of Bari, in Southern Italy, on July 9 -12, 2013.

It aims to bring together lecturers, teachers, educators, curriculum designers, mathematics education researchers, learning technologists and educational software designers, who share an interest in improving the quality of teaching and learning by effective use of technology.

It provides a forum for researchers and practitioners in this field to discuss and share better practices, theoretical know-how, innovation and perspectives on educative technologies and their impact on the teaching and learning of mathematics.

Plenary Speakers

Gilles Aldon (École Normale Supérieure de Lyon, France), Regina Bruder (University of Darmstadt, Germany), Michal Yerushalmy (University of Haifa, Israel), David Murrels (Secondary Teacher, England), Ketty Savioli (Primary Teacher, Italy)

Proposals on Conference Themes are welcomed in the following forms:

- Presentations (to describe research outcomes, research in progress, current and innovative practice, theoretical, philosophical and special interests)
- Workshops (to share good practice by lecturers and teachers, to introduce new technologies and discuss practical issues)
- Posters (to be displayed, presented and discussed)

Conference Themes

Curriculum, The impact of technology on the mathematics curriculum

Assessment, New possibilities for assessment in mathematics

Students, Technology to motivate and support students to learn mathematics

Teachers, Technology for mathematics teachers’ professional development

Innovation, New developments in technology for learning and teaching mathematics

Applications, Technology as a bridge between mathematics and other subjects

Software, Design, evaluate and choose software to learn and teach mathematics
